Williams Kastner ó On May 8, 2019, Washington's Governor signed legislation which makes significant changes to the law on the enforceability of the non-competition covenants or agreements which employers require their employees to sign.¹ As a result, effective January 1, 2020 many of the non-competition agreements employers now have with their employees and others, which are governed by Washington law, will become unenforceable under this law. While there will likely be challenges to the enforceability of parts of the law, companies need to take action before the first of the year to protect their interests.
(Please go to www.williamskastner.com to view the entire press release.)

Williams Mullen ó The 2016 amendments to the Toxic Substances Control Act (‘‘TSCA’’) made numerous changes to TSCA, including increasing public transparency of chemical information. To accomplish this, the amendments required EPA to establish a plan for reviewing all confidential business information (‘‘CBI’’) claims for a specific chemical identity asserted by a manufacturer. EPA was required to do this no later than one year after it completed the TSCA inventory of active and inactive substances (‘‘Inventory’’). EPA released the updated Inventory on February 19, 2019 and published a proposed rule on April 23, 2019. Once the rule is effective, EPA is required to complete its review of all CBI claims no later than five years after the Inventory was released, or by February 19, 2024. (Please go to www.williamsmullen.com to view the entire press release.)

Law Prof. Richardson to receive Tulane's highest teaching award

April 29, 2019 9:00 AM | Alina Hernandez ahernandez4@tulane.edu

Law Prof. Sally Richardson is well-known for her walking tours of New Orleans during Mardi Gras season, which she explains to students in terms of property law and the city's customs of practicing centuries-old English rules of private property. (Photo by Sally Asher)

She's a respected scholar of property rights, a dedicated educator who engages students and expertly brings to life often arcane laws.

She's also known for having an impressive throwing arm that can send a box of Girl Scout cookies flying to the very back of a classroom and into the hands of deserving students (We've seen it. There's video.)

Now, Tulane Law Prof. Sally Richardson is being honored by Tulane University with its highest teaching honor – the President's Award for Excellence in Professional and Graduate Teaching. Richardson, the A.D. Freeman Associate Professor of Civil Law, is an engaging and dynamic educator, beloved by her students who say she inspires them with her creative teaching methods, high standards and genuine concern for their professional development.

The all-campus award will be formally presented to Richardson at the University's Unified Commencement on May 18.

Richardson writes frequently on the PropertyProf Blog, where she covers topics ranging from the presidential candidates' perspectives on eminent domain to the property law and customs that govern Mardi Gras. She even explained a Roman property law word that tripped up a competitor in the Scripps National Spelling Bee. And recently, she posited that intellectual property law has played a significant role in building Girl Scout cookies into the country's best-selling cookie empire. That lesson lived up her law school classes – and a video lit up the law school social media accounts – as she tossed boxes of cookies to students whose classroom contributions merited a reward.

Internationally, Richardson was elected secretary of the Association of Law, Property and Society \(ALPS\) for the 2018-19 year at its annual conference in the Netherlands, an organization that brings together more than 150 international property law scholars annually. She has served the organization's board since 2015 and has helped organize its annual conferences since 2014. In 2020, she and Tulane will host the conference.

In addition to her executive leadership role at ALPS, Richardson served until 2016 on the executive board of the American Society of Comparative Law's Younger Comparativist Committee. As the 2015-16 Gordon Gamm Faculty Scholar, she organized the Younger Comparativists' annual conference, hosting more than 100 scholars from across the world at Tulane. In 2017, she was elected the Parliamentarian for the American Society of Comparative Law.

Richardson's work has been published in the American Journal of Comparative Law, the North Carolina Law Review, Tulane Law Review and others. In 2015, her scholarship was selected for the prestigious Yale/Stanford/Harvard Junior Faculty Forum.

She helped start a Federal Bar Association student chapter at Tulane and has played a leading role in expanding and energizing the civil law program. The Class of 2015 chose her to receive the Felix Frankfurter Distinguished Teaching Award, the Law School's highest teaching honor.

In winning the President's Award for Excellence in Graduate and Professional Teaching, Richardson will join a host of law school colleagues who have previously won the prestigious award, including Professors Martin Davies, Gabe Feldman, Jancy Hoeffel, Keith Werhan, and Tania Tetlow (now President of Loyola University in New Orleans).

"The law school is proud to have a strong tradition of teaching excellence," Meyer said, "and Sally Richardson is plainly one of our finest."
